Early Life

When Betsy was really young she got Rheumatic fever and couldn't go outside. She couldn't ride a bike until she was 12 years old. Betsy did not like to play with dolls and she had two sisters and six brothers. Her and the girls had to do the inside work like cleaning and doing the dishes. The boys had to do the outside work like trimming bushes and raking. In school Betsy loves to read but she hated math.

LOVE

Growing up, Betsy was a very normal person. She liked whatever music was popular at the time, she wore what was popular, big baggy sweaters, poodle skirts, and saddle shoes. Only one thing made her different, she didn't have an interest for sports (partially due to her Rheumatic fever). Back in the 1950s some styles of music that were popular are: rock'n roll, the blues, swing, and country music. Betsy really enjoyed reading but hated math. Though Betsy didn't like sports, she loved to play outside.

Family

When Betsy was young she had many brothers and sisters, eight brothers and sisters that is. Her early life was also tough because her mother died at the age of three. Luckily, her dad was the best. He loved her and helped her a lot. Now, Betsy has a some kids of her own. She has one daughter and one son. Her husband served in the military for 22 years and moved to many different places. Her favorite places were Texas and Washington State. Betsy's family was very important to her in her entire lifetime.

Changes in Life

Life has changed a lot during Betsy's life. Chores are a lot easier today. They used to wash by hand, but now there are machines for everything. When she was a child during World War Two there was food rationing. As an adult though Betsy got to buy whatever she wanted. Another example is that photos and cameras have changed as to now photos last almost forever but back then the photos would fade in time.

Adulthood

As an adult Betsy lived in many different states, because Betsy's husband served in the military. Her two favorite states to live in were Texas and Washington. When Betsy was 22 she got married and had two children. Betsy loved reading her whole life but, sadly as she got older reading has become more difficult for her. Now as an adult Betsy lives at Island Shores, where they take very good care of her.
